SUNDAY RACES OAKLAND TRACK PROMISE THRILLS

Oakland, Nov. 24—In quest of new records and additional glory the country's leading knights of the roaring road will battle in a 100-mile classic next Sunday afternoon at the Oakland speedway. Linn Mathewson, manager of the speedway, announced today that in addition to this event five others are scheduled. One will be the qualifying trials while the other four are for class B cars, divided into three ten-lap affairs and a 25-lap battle.

The qualifications start at noon with the first competitive event getting under way at 2 o'clock.

Heading the list of entries are such noted drivers as Bob Carey, 1932 national champion; "Howdy" Wilcox, third place driver in this year's national standing; Ernie Triplett, 1931 Pacific coast champion; Wilbur Shaw, "Wild Bill" Cummings, 150-mile record holder and winner of the 150-mile national championship race at the Oakland Speedway Nov. 13; "Babe" Stapp, Sam Palmer, Kelly Pettillo, Bryan Saulpaugh, Mel Keneally, Al Gordon, Chet Gardner, Ralph Gregg, Lloyd Axel, Lou Tomei and some 20 others.

Triplett, who is the leading competitor for the 1932 Pacific coast championship, has an opportunity Sunday to virtually cinch the title for himself. Wilbur Shaw at the present time is the only pilot who has any kind of an opportunity to take these honors away from him.

It is the consensus of opinion that many of the existing American dirt track records, ranging from one to 100 miles—all held on the Oakland speedway—will go by the boards Sunday, as the oval today is faster than it has ever been since it was thrown open for racing.

Local High Girls Defeat San Jose, Los Gatos, Hockey

Friday the Campbell high school girls were entertained at a hockey sport-day held at the San Jose high school. The Los Gatos high girls were also present. Once again the Campbell girls' team was victorious and although the score was not as high as previously, the opposing teams scored no goals. After the game the girls enjoyed a social hour in the gym where refreshments were served. —Joan Hughes

Former Resident Dies, Temple, Ariz.

Mrs. Cyrus W. Davis (Andrea McFarland) died in Tempe, Ariz., on Nov. 10 after three days' illness with pneumonia.

Mrs. Davis made many friends in Campbell when she resided with her sister, Mrs. Alfred E. Wood of McCoy avenue, and her sudden death has caused deep sorrow.

Her husband, Cyrus Davis, and a seven-months-old baby survive her.

The Utili Dulci group of the Congregational guild will meet with Mrs. Walter Stray Dec. 1 at 2 p.m. This will be the last meeting of the group. There will be a short program and the envelopes will be opened, each telling in rhyme how their money was earned.

Home Economics Country Women's Topic Monday

Following a brief business meeting Monday afternoon, members and guests of the Country Woman's club enjoyed the results of a carefully planned and successfully executed program.

The topic, "Household Economics," covers so wide a field that the committee limited their discussion to a few phases of food problems.

The chairman, Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, was unable to be present owing to a severe case of the flu, and Mrs. I. R. Abbott presided. Mrs. C. H. Whitman read Mrs. Kennedy's paper, which was entitled "Preparing a Club Dinner." The subject was cleverly developed as the story of a group of young women preparing and serving a dinner. Several complete menus were considered, choices made, work allotted, and all the details considered, with the final successful evening, all entertainingly depicted.

Miss Helen L. Mignon of the San Jose State college was introduced and discussed informally and very understandingly the need for the study of nutrition and balanced diet. She told of the need for checking the diets of students in college to determine whether their lack of physical ability was due to improper diet. Finding many such and trying to remedy those conditions has demonstrated the need of education of mothers and teachers so that coming generations will start with and develop better bodies.

Not alone should all the necessary elements be provided, but in proper proportions.

A roll call of members was responded to with helpful household hints, new recipes or descriptions of utensils.

A valuable souvenir was presented to each one present. It consisted of typewritten copies of a collection of favorite recipes.

As the closing feature of the afternoon coffee and sandwiches were served. The latter included a wide variety of the attractive open-face kind; folded and toasted cheese sandwiches, and sandwiches of the ribbon type.

Mrs. A. W. Wellington was the other member of the committee who aided in making the program such a success. The ladies were assisted in serving by Jewel and Jeanette Abbott.

MARIONETTES TO FEATURE GUILD SHOW DECEMBER 9

Wooden dolls will strut the stage in fairy dramas and will sing musical little ditties in the marionette show which will be given Dec. 9 at 8 p. m. in the grammar school auditorium under the auspices of the Harriette Windsor group of the Congregational church guild.

The marionettes, which are a part of the Myriam Toles puppets of Berkeley will be operated by Nestor Paiva, Howard Banks, and Myriam Toles, whose performances have charmed audiences all over the state.

The entertainment will include a dramatization of a fairy tale and the presentation of five Mother Goose rhymes through song and tableaux.

Admission charges for adults or children will be small.

Local Celebrities Tell Why They're Thankful For 1932

Campbell folk are greeting their Thanksgiving turkey with optimism; a true spirit of thankfulness, and a bit of spicy hilarity. This was the discovery of a Campbell Press reporter who queried a few of the town's notables.

Said these citizens:

George S. Robson, of the J. C. Ainsley company—I'm thankful that I live in California and that I have good health and the ability to enjoy work and play. What more could I desire?

S. N. Hedegard, rancher and real estate man—I'm thankful for the cooperation displayed among the farmers in backing the prune pool.

Herbert M. Shadle, president of the chamber of commerce and local druggist—We should be thankful that we live in a country that has passed through a revolution without having any bloodshed.

Carl B. Field, merchant—We're thankful that the Stanford-California game didn't last any longer.

A. T. Davey, drygoods merchant—I'm thankful that things are as good as they are.

Herold Morton, proprietor of the lumber yard—I'm thankful; things might have been worse.

Al Bulmore, local butcher—I'm thankful, first because I've found after personal investigation that there will be no one in Campbell or vicinity going hungry this Thanksgiving; next that the flu has flown from Campbell, leaving no fatalities; and then, that myself and family are enjoying now the best of health and that under present conditions my business is beyond expectation.

W. R. Coupland, manager of the Community Chest campaign—I'm thankful that I now have two sets of teeth, and they all hit.

Mrs. Sam Sanfillipo, merchant—We're thankful for our health and because we haven't had the flu so far.

Dr. J. Ed Fanning, dentist—I'm thankful that more people haven't declared a moratorium on dental work.

Dan Clark, druggist—I'm thankful for the good friends I've found in Campbell.

Harry Smith, postmaster, tells his story thusly:

My thanks are due
For many things.
For the heart that sings;
For the friend whose true
And loyal soul rings,
"I'm thankful."

My thanks are due
For will to serve
One who may deserve
Much that comes to me and you,
And still has his nerve,
"I'm thankful."

My thanks are due
For power to move
With my friends, to prove
That life really true
Is doing for others.
I thank you.

CHRISTMAS TREE ASSN. PLANNING FOR YULETIME

All California is preparing again to say "Merry Christmas to the rest of the world with thousands of outdoor Christmas trees. On front lawns and city parks, in school yards and along the highways, trees will gleam with cheer.

Sponsored by the Outdoor Christmas Tree Association of California, the cause of the living tree has won such public favor that it is expected that there will be more than 50,000 decorated outdoor trees and shrubs in northern and central California this year, with almost an equal number in the southern part of the state. Chambers of commerce, service clubs, schools, women's organizations, garden clubs and many other organized groups have endorsed the movement and have launched active drives in their various communities for more and better outdoor Christmas trees. Many contests have been announced and there is already evidenced keen friendly rivalry between individuals, residential districts and neighboring cities for the blue ribbon tree awards and other prizes.

The Outdoor Christmas Tree association in California was started in 1927 by Clarence F. Pratt who decorated the tree in his own yard the year before and was inspired to urge others to do so through the delight expressed by a little sick child who admired the tree each night from his bed near the window.

Thanksgiving Is Theme of Grangers At Recent Meet

Thanksgiving was the theme of the regular Grange meeting held in the Odd Fellows' hall Tuesday night.

During the lecturer's hour, which was in charge of Mrs. Horace Keesling, substituting for Mrs. Jessie McChesney, members busied themselves discovering how many shorter words could be made out of Thanksgiving. Mrs. M. E. Purmort won the ladies' prize by discovering 54 words.

An enjoyable five minutes was spent while members told those things for which they were thankful. Good health, lovely weather, and the prune pool were among the benefits mentioned.

A regular business meeting was held before the lecturer's hour, and was presided over by W. H. Woodbury, worthy master.

After the program a social hour and refreshments were enjoyed by the members. In charge of the refreshments were Lawrence Hendricks, Werner Raab, Mrs. A. C. Brundrett, Mrs. Charlotte Sutter, Charles Wightman, and Mrs. John Raab.

At the next meeting of the local Grange, Dec. 13, officers for the year will be elected.

Thanksgiving guests of the J. C. Soutar family are Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Foreman of Concord and Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Phinney and Myron Phinney of Santa Cruz.

ON WITH THE DANCE

Now that the national election is over, we are apt to hear more and more about economy in our national, state and local units of government. Both the great political parties have been pledged to a program of economy. Now that the Democrats have won so sweepingly it is to be expected that they will take the lead in reducing the budget in every way possible. It is also to be expected that the Republican leaders in congress will assist them. There will have to be more budget balancing in the future and this cannot be done entirely by levying new taxes. What ought to be done is not so much to find new sources of raising revenue, but new sources of cutting down expenditures.

What is true of the national government is equally true of the state and local governments. The way to reduce taxes is to economize and the way to economize is to pare costs and reduce budgets in every way possible. The investment bankers of New England recently struck the heart of the matter when they said:

"Economy consists not in raising more but in spending less. The problem of municipal expenditures in New England is primarily that of reducing current operating costs, for with few exceptions our communities are not heavily bonded, and debt service charges do not constitute a large proportion of the budget. On the other hand, maintenance costs of Massachusetts cities are higher than for cities of corresponding size throughout the United States."

While it is up to the national government to economize in every way possible for the purpose of reducing taxes it is not to be forgotten, as we have repeatedly said, that the average man's burden of taxes comes to him not from the national government nor even from the state, but generally from local taxes. Take the situation in the state of Indiana for example. The Hoosier commonwealth is out of debt. It has one of the finest highway systems in the country and the roads are paid for. The state has no bonds outstanding and in addition to being out of debt and paying its way as it goes, has cash and good securities in its state treasury in the sum of fifteen millions of dollars. And the state tax rate has been steadily reduced during the past few years.

Yet the people of Indiana are, like the people in other states, groaning under a burden of taxes. What is the answer? It is simple. The people have been piling taxes on themselves in their local units of government. They have been steadily building and improving, adding to public and to the number of public buildings and to the number of public officials which must be maintained and paid for by the counties, townships and municipalities. As a result, the taxes have mounted steadily higher, despite the fact that little of the burden is piled on by the state or national governments.

Fortunately the people of the country are becoming tax conscious. In Indiana it is predicted that next year in many localities the taxes on farms and other real estate will be little more than half of the total this year. In other states, too, there will be retrenchment with lessened tax burdens. This must come sooner or later if we are to continue our present system of popular government. Unless the people can manage their own affairs and keep themselves out of public bankruptcy, they will find some sort of dictator doing it for them. But we do not believe this is going to happen. It is more likely that an aroused public opinion will bring the desired results. This is not a matter for partisan politics but one for earnest cooperative effort on the part of all citizens who have the interests of their country, their state and their city at heart. As the Boston Transcript well puts it: "The way to economize is to economize." Let us start the job as soon as is humanly possible.

POOR ECONOMY

From the foregoing opinion one would be led to believe that we favor economy in government. We do—and there are plenty of items in our state, national and local government that can stand paring down. On the other hand, there are many invaluable functions of government which must not be crippled through injudicious economy. The entire situation is one which must be studied with the utmost care in order that we may avoid the curtailment of useful government and let unnecessary bureaus run wild with public money.

Hereabouts, people are inclined to lose sight of the major savings which may be effected through keeping an eye on government, and are prone to take out their tax grudge on the local schools. Taxes, as a whole, are too high; there's no use denying that, but the local schools are minor contributors to that condition.

School taxes in this community are, we believe, about as low as they are anywhere in the state. We are fairly well equipped to take care of the elementary and secondary education of our young people at the present time, but if there is any further reduction in working funds our schools are sure to suffer. If this comes to pass our young people will, in the end, lose more than their elders will have gained in taxes saved.

The idea we are trying to get across is this: Education is perhaps the most important function of government, and as such should not be handicapped by unreasonable curtailment of funds, at least while there are so many other places where money can be saved. In other words, why go gunning for rabbits when there are a lot of man-eating tigers at large in other branches of government?

THE RIGHT WAY

Recently, in this column, we made some rather pointed remarks about the California judge who fined a drunken driver only one dollar, on the ground that the repeal of the Wright act had knocked liquor law enforcement into a cocked hat.

A member of the Santa Clara county judiciary handled a similar case more intelligently. To three motorists convicted of operating their automobiles while under the influence of intoxicants he addressed the following thought: "The repeal of the Wright act in no way gives you permission to drive your automobiles over the public highway when you are drunk. It has always been against the law, and it will always be against the law, even if the 18th amendment is finally repealed. You may expect punishment fitting your crime."

Those are not the precise words of the judge, but they convey his ideas on the subject. It must be admitted that he takes the proper attitude.

A FRAGILE GLASS HOUSE

Governor James Rolph of California recently took it upon himself to charge Senator Sanborn Young with incompetence in his manner of conducting the state narcotic commission.

Now, Senator Young has for many years made a study of the narcotic situation not only in California, but all over the world. Under Governor Young he enjoyed the complete confidence of the administration, and since his appointment to the narcotic commission under the former governor Senator Young has made it hard to obtain drugs in California.

It occurs to us that Governor Rolph has little right to criticize anybody on their ability. His remarks are so apt to take the shape of a boomerang, and come back to break a jagged hole in his big, glass house.

THANKS

This is more or less a Thanksgiving issue of the Press. Other news seems to be scarce, what with folks coming home to spend the day with their families, and others going away to do the same thing. It's a fine old institution—if for no other reason that it gets people together once a year (which in many cases is quite often enough). It's also a break for the grocers, poultry raisers and so forth.

People have a lot to be thankful for this year. Things could be a lot worse than they are, so if you're thankful for that you're thankful for a lot.

Personally, we're thankful that our creditors are no more insistent than they are. And we'd be thankful if some of our overdue subscriptions would be paid in time for us to buy a little, teeny-weeny Christmas tree. There, it's out!

KIWANIS NOTES

"Thanksgiving," the why, how, when and for whom was very inspiringly given the Kiwanis club by Roger Darling in a luncheon talk Tuesday.

The many blessings of family, friends, associations, country and beauties were among the listed reasons for Thanksgiving and Brother Rogers has the fluent flow of phrases to express his ideas.

Jim Dempsey performed his stunt as chairman with due decorum.

Next luncheon will be addressed by Judge O'Connor on the motor laws and whyfores. Herold Morton will keep his peace with Percy by wielding the gavel.

Guests of the Ira Abbott family over Thanksgiving are Mrs. Abbotts sister and her family, who come from Lemoore.

Low PUMP EFFICIENCY is like a slipping clutch

-IT TAKES MORE POWER

WHEN you discover "boarder cows" in your herd or "boarder hens" in your flock, you wisely get rid of them. When your automobile clutch begins to slip, you check the trouble to save gasoline and to bring the car back to its normal power and speed.

California farmers and orchardists are fast learning that low pump efficiency is like the slipping clutch. It wastes power. An inefficient pump sends irrigating costs skyward. The best way to reduce irrigating costs is to increase pump efficiency.

What is the efficiency of your irrigation pump? Have you the proper type of equipment for your particular needs and is it properly installed? Does it operate near its designed capacity or is its efficiency cut down by worn parts or variation in the water level? The answers to these questions will determine whether or not you can save power and reduce your irrigating costs.

The possibility of reducing irrigating costs is strongly in your favor, for experts estimate that the great majority of irrigation pumps in California are not more than 35% efficient.

Get a reliable engineer to test your pump. It may be wasting from 15% to 45% of the power used. This waste can be avoided.

Our Rural Power Representative will gladly furnish you with the names of reliable pump engineers to make the test for you. For further information, write or telephone our nearest office.

THE FARMERS CORNER

By Ralph H. Taylor

"Further development and expansion of California agriculture will not be warranted for many years . . ."

That clear-cut, unequivocal verdict, turning thumbs down on further expansion of California's agricultural plant until a market is found for present production, comes from the Giannini Foundation of Agricultural Economics after a thorough-going study of the land utilization problem.

The foundation, an integral part of the state college of agriculture, supports the findings of the Agricultural Legislative Committee of California, made public some six months ago, that the imperative need of the California farmer today is "More production per acre, rather than more acres in production."

H. R. Tolley, director of the foundation, submits his conclusions in part as follows:

"The utilization and conservation of California's land resources is a problem in which the entire state is interested. In our research in land utilization, the Giannini foundation first turned its attention toward the question of a need for further expansion of the agricultural area of the state.

"A careful appraisal of population in the United States showed that the growth of population, and hence the total demand for farm products, is slowing down, and that the market for California's agricultural products, in the United States at least, cannot be expected to expand as rapidly in the future as it has in the past.

"An appraisal of the available water supply, upon which so much of our agriculture is dependent, led to the conclusion that additional land can be brought under irrigation only at relatively high cost.

"These facts, together with the declining prices for all agricultural products, have led the Giannini foundation to the conclusion that further development and expansion of California agriculture will not be warranted for many years."

The foundation properly takes the stand that the California farmer already on the land, fighting for a decent return on his investment, has a right to protection against land-development booms which would bring new acreages into production and aggravate the problem of over-expansion and price-cutting.

In some areas of the state, however, it finds that further development is badly needed on land already under production to make the projects profitable. In some other areas, abandonment of agriculture entirely would be advisable, the foundation finds, coupled with the promotion of land use for recreational purposes.

Dealing with the problem of regulating market supply to consumer demand, the foundation reported on its research as follows:

"At the request of the citrus marketing organizations of the state, our economists have studied records of production, shipment and prices of oranges in past years in an endeavor to measure the factors that influence price and to determine what conditions withhold poor quality fruit and undesirable sizes from the market would tend to increase the incomes of orange growers.

"We found that the general price level, purchasing power of consumers and the supply of competing fruits, together with volume of shipments from California and quality of the fruit, all have a marked influence on prices. Orange growers cannot, individually or collectively influence these factors, but, through advertising and trade promotion, they can influence the demand for oranges, while all the marketing agencies working together can control the quantity and quality of oranges sent to market.

"Our study showed that, with the present low general price level and low consumer buying power, a program of withholding the lower grades and undesirable sizes from the market would be beneficial pro-

Thanks-

In prosperous years we have more to be thankful for than we do in lean years—but we are not so fully aware of our blessings.

This year, with prosperity still lurking around the corner, we have made no particular material gains over which to wax thankful.

What we have acquired, however, and for which we are duly grateful, is the loyal patronage and the esteem of Campbell people. For these things we sincerely thank you.
